Overview

Good corporate governance practices make good business sense. In today's rapidly changing legal and economic environments, corporations and governments adopting practices that provide adequate investor protection and transparency, and sound practices by the boards of directors are better able to attract domestic and international investment.

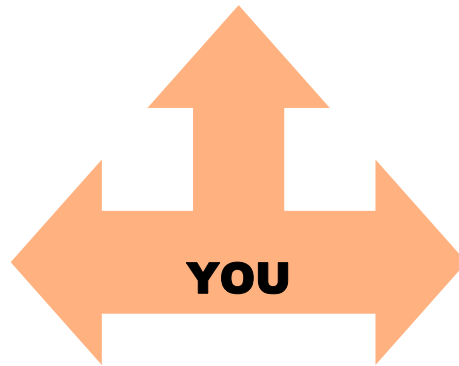

Understanding, adopting and implementing global and domestic guidelines ensures that your corporation is well positioned to attract capital from investors, both domestic and international, by empowering your board and fostering investor confidence in your enterprise. Thus, allowing you to maximize your profits and your investors' return on investment.

The creation of sustainable corporate governance measures assists in the creation of best practices for your organization, the development of the capital markets, the improvement of transparency, the increase of investment opportunities, and the advancement of trust.
